Jasprit Bumrah is not just one of India's premier pace bowlers but also among the highest earning cricketers in the country. His contracts, endorsements and match fees combine to make a quite impressive financial portfolio. Here's how it all adds up.

BCCI Central Contract & Match Fees

Bumrah is in the Grade A+ central contract category of the Board of Control for Cricket in India (BCCI). This grade is reserved for the top players who are regularly representing India, and it comes with a fixed annual retainer of ₹7 crore.

On top of that retainer, he earns match fees for every international appearance:

These amounts depend on how many matches he plays in each format in a year. The more he plays, the more he earns here.

Endorsements & Other Income

Beyond cricket contracts, Bumrah earns significantly through brand endorsements. He is associated with several big brands. Reports suggest he charges around ₹1.5-2 crore per endorsement deal, depending on the brand, campaign, and visibility.

He also owns luxury assets – cars, properties – and like many top cricketers, these contribute to his wealth.

Putting all major income sources together (central contract retainer, match fees across formats, IPL salary, endorsements, and assets), Bumrah's net worth is estimated around ₹60-65 crore as of latest assessments. In a good year, combining everything, Bumrah likely brings home ₹25-30 crore or more, depending on how many international matches he plays and how many endorsement deals are active.
