

Electric Lamps Export of Indonesia: The Trade Analysis of 2024

Electronic lamps are a category of lighting devices that use electronic components like simple filaments for regulating lights. This specific commodity is a leading choice for the globally evolving traders because of the roles it plays as a basic necessity for households, offices, factories, and public infrastructure. The global shift toward energy efficiency, along with the cost-efficient global manufacturing hubs, has maintained continuity in the global trade of electronic lamps. Indonesia Import Data says, the country in Southeast Asia, bordered by Australia and the Indian subcontinent in the north and east, has emerged as a substantial contributor to the worldwide export market of electric lamps due to the demand for energy-efficient lighting worldwide and the rising adoption of smart lighting systems.

The export opportunities with ASEAN and beyond, accompanied by the need for energy-efficient products due to climate targets, have resulted in a total valuation of electric lamp exports worth 954 million US dollars in 2024. The capacity of the country to produce a wide variety of lamps and the presence of multinational lighting companies in Indonesia have benefited the overall trade.
